 SIGNATURE DRINK

Broadly, vodka is a neutral spirit produced from sugar-bearing materials such as grains, potatoes, molasses, beets, and a variety of other plants bottled between 80 and 110 proof. Rye and wheat are the classic grains for vodka. Vodka from a pot still will contain some of the delicate aromatics and flavours of the product from which it was produced. Vodka from a more “efficient” column still is usually a neutral, characterless spirit.

What few realise is that gin, in a simple form, is very much made with the same rules as a vodka infusion – it is a neutral spirit with added flavours. Two methods can be used: the first is compounded gin, a simple combination of neutral spirit with oils and extracts from juniper. The more artful, high-quality gins, however, are made in stills.

Tequila is a product of the sap of a plant known formally as the Weber Blue Agave . There are 5 designated Mexican states in which Tequila can be made: Nayarit, Tamaulipas, Jalisco, Michoacán, and Guanajuato; but a majority of tequila originates in the town of Tequila itself in the state of Jalisco. In these areas, young agaves known as hijuelos are taken from mature plants while the unearthed spores are re-planted in the fields for 8 to 10 years until they mature. When ready for harvest it is cooked for 36 hours until the cells in the heart (corazon) break down, converting the inherent starch to sugar. The agave is, in turn, broken down, washed, and placed into steel tanks for fermentation. Once the alcohol is born, two common distillation cycles are undertaken. The final step involves diluting, bottling and resting in wooden barrels for flavour

Mezcal is a distilled alcoholic beverage made out of the pulp of different agaves, which is called maguey in Mexico. The word mezcal comes from Nahuatl mexcalli metl and ixcalli, which means “oven-cooked agave”. With tequila belonging to the family of mescal, there is much confusion over the difference between these two spirits. Tequila is, crucially, much like cognac: it can only come from one place and region. All other spirits of this style are “mezcal”; thus the confusion because all tequilas are mezcal but not all mezcals are tequilas.

Whiskey / Whisky

Whisky Produced from a fermented grain mash that is usually aged in oak, whiskey has infinite varieties depending on the tradition, origin, and distillery. Despite the variances, all production starts with harvesting grains and grinding them at the distillery into a grist that is then mixed with warm water, yeast, and enzymes until fermentation sets in, creating what is known as the 'wash.' Quite beery in its makeup, this is then distilled and rested in oak barrels until blending or bottling time of the distiller's choice.

Bourbon

The name comes from a county in eastern Kentucky, thus named for the Bourbon. Bourbon whiskey must contain a minimum of 51% corn, be produced in the United States, be distilled at less than 80% ABV (160 proof) and be aged for a minimum of two years in newly-charred barrels, although in practice virtually all straight whiskeys are aged for at least four years. Three important label distinctions are "straight" aged the minimum 2 years; "small batch" for whiskeys bottled from a blend of select barrels; and finally, "single barrel" for whiskeys aged and bottled by the distiller's choice from a single cask

RYE WHISKY

Rye Whisky

A spirit produced from at least 51% rye, distilled at no more than 160 proof, and aged in charred oak barrels at less than 125 proof. It arose when the settlers in the Mid-Atlantic States arrived and it became the favoured whiskey until the Prohibition Era, when white spirits gained favour for their ability to be “hidden” on one’s breath.

Blended Scotch

A blend of 100% grain whisky and malt whisky. Generally, the higher quality the blend, the more malt whisky is used. Blended Scotch is made in three styles – standard, premium and deluxe.

100% malted barley, one distillery, different regions, double or triple pot still distillation. The end product is rich in aroma. Maturation is mostly done in ex-sherry or ex-bourbon casks. It can be a mix of malt whiskies from different years (the age statement on the bottle should give the age of the youngest spirit in the mix). The barley malt for Scotch whisky is first dried over fire that has been stoked with dried peat for distinctive smoky tang.

Brandy

A spirit made from fruit (juice, pulp or skin), brandy is one of the most popular alcoholic drinks in the world. The process involves pressing the fruit into liquid and storing it in large tanks while the yeast converts the sugars in the fruit fluid into alcohol. Once this is achieved, distillation begins; the product is laid to rest in oak casks and bottled.

Cognac

Famed the world over, Cognac is a grape brandy made exclusively in the French region of the same name. It is double-distilled and aged in oak casks made traditionally from Limousin oak. French laws mandate that 90% of the grapes used in cognac production come from a blend of Ugni Blanc, Colombard, and Folle Blanche.

GRAPPA

Minimally aged and with little to no contact with wood, common pomace brandies include Italian Grappa and French Marc. These brandies have a raw, lively taste, typical of the aromatic qualities of the grapes used. They are made from the pressed skins, stems, and pulps traditionally leftover from winemaking.

Armagnac

Often equaling cognac in quality, armagnac is actually the oldest type of grape brandy in France, dating back to the early 15th century.

Made in Gascony, whose inland position has meant its popularity is less than Cognac, distillation takes place in the unique Alambic Armagnacais, a type of copper column still. The resulting brandy has a rustic, assertive character and aroma that requires additional cask aging to mellow it out. Most Armagnacs are blends, but unlike cognac, single vintages and single vineyard bottling can be found.

Armagnac production comes from a blend of: Ugni Blanc, Folle Blanche, Colombard and Baco 22A.

Calvados

An apple brandy from Normandy, where the fruit grows rampant, Calvados is perhaps the most famous non-grape fruit brandy in the world. All varieties are aged in oak casks for a minimum of two years. Though cognac-style terms such as V.S.O.P and Hors d'Age are frequently used on labels, they have no legal meaning.
